

PERSONAL BODYGUARD OF STANFORD WHITE TELLS HOW ARCHITECT WAS SHADOWED

Private Detective Employed by Slain Architect Tells How He Watched "Bloodhounds" Alleged to Have Been Hired by Thaw.

White, but they were put upon the trail of Miss Pauline Desmond and Miss Gertrude Grant, two actress acquaintances of the architect.

However, I will tell my story just as the events developed and let the public judge as to the underlying motives of the principals.

My business is that of a private detective. I am no better nor no worse than others of my profession. If I was without gratitude and a sense of justice I would not tell my story to The Evening World. Here is the account as near as I can give it by references to my diary:

In February of last year I was engaged for several weeks on a private matter in the vicinity of the Madison Square Garden. It was a divorce case, and the lady involved, who was the wife of a person prominent in the theatrical world, was to live near the Manhattan Club.

FEBRUARY 10, 1905.—I noted several men loitering around the vicinity of the Manhattan Club and the foot of the Madison Square Garden Tower. In one of these men I recognized a private detective who had previously been in the employ of the W. L. Sawyer Detective Bureau—his name is Louis Harris.

FEBRUARY 11.—Seeing these men there night after night, and being an employer of men engaged in their line of business, I was naturally curious to know the object of their presence in the neighborhood. I became informed of their mission when a man 6 feet 3 inches tall rode up to the Twenty-sixth street entrance of the Manhattan Club in an automobile, followed by two men on bicycles and a third riding alone in a cab, the latter being the man Harris, whom I had previously seen in the neighborhood at the foot of the tower.

FEBRUARY 12.—From the starter at the Manhattan Club I learned that the tall man who had entered the building several nights before and was being shadowed was Stanford White, the millionaire, and that he had an art studio in the tower across the street.

FEBRUARY 14.—I called upon Mr. White at his office, No. 160 Fifth avenue. He received me at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, and I briefly stated the incidents which I had observed. When he learned that he was being shadowed he laughed nervously and bit his lips until they bled.

"You must be mistaken; there is no one following me now," he said. I assured him that there was no mistake about the matter, and then related in detail the incidents of the preceding night. "Oh, please!" he exclaimed, an expression he used repeatedly in his conversation and his strongest curse word, "I am sure that you must be mistaken."

Mr. White went on to explain that some weeks before he had noticed that several men had been following him, but he thought that they had ceased in their surveillance of his movements. To convince Mr. White that I was right it was arranged that I should leave the office and take up cover in the neighborhood, and that afterward he was to come out and walk slowly to places designated by myself. Down Fifth avenue to Twentieth street, through to Broadway, where he was to enter the Continental Hotel, then up Broadway to the Flatiron Building, and across the avenue entering the Fifth Avenue Hotel.

The architect did as he was directed, entering the Fifth Avenue Hotel on the Twenty-third street side, and coming out into Broadway, thence back to the Continental Hotel and through to his office again. I remained under cover in the Fifth Avenue Hotel and when I judged that Mr. White was back I called up on the telephone.

"What do you think now?" I said.

"I guess you are right, young man," was his reply. "I saw two men on foot, a man riding a bicycle, also a woman."

He made arrangements to meet me later at my house, No. 112 East Forty-fifth street.

Mr. White called for me at 7:30 o'clock that evening and took me aboard his red touring car. He appeared to be rather excited and in a great hurry. He assured me that he had managed to give his followers the slip. We went direct to Sherry's restaurant, where we met Lawyer Abraham Hummel, who had been summoned up town from his office by telephone. After some conversation it was arranged that I should call at the office of Howe & Hummel, No. 246 Broadway.

Abe Hummel Made Arrangements.

Feb. 15.—I was ushered into conference with Lawyer Hummel by that person's nephew, A. H. Kaffenburgh at the latter's office. It was arranged that I should look after the interests of Mr. White, and for the time being Mr. Hummel was to foot the bills. The agreement was that I should supply the services of two men for $14 a day and their expenses. My instructions from Mr. White the night previous were that I should ascertain who these men and women were, what detective agency they were working for and who was the principal in the matter.

FEB. 16.—To carry out the contract entered into with Mr. White and Lawyer Hummel I employed Leo C. Bergoff, my brother, and Charles L. Harrell, the latter an experienced and able operative. I also devoted a great deal of my own time to the case.

Identity Discovered.

MARCH 7.—These weeks' careful covering of the men and women who were following Mr. White established the identity of J. W. William Gibbs, Louis Harris, Harry Dougherty, a woman named Nellie, who has since married Gibbs, and Fanny, a large blonde, as operatives, all in the employ of John E. McKenna, the head of the Greater New York Detective Agency.

MARCH 8.—I was still calling every day at Mr. White's office and was with him almost every night. He would send me tickets in advance to attend, and when I called at his office there was always a good cigar for me, supplemented by the eager question: "Well, what have you learned?"

MARCH 9.—Mr. White grew anxious to know who was hiring the work done. He seemed like a man cowering from fear of an unknown foe. "I cannot understand it," he said to me, "I have never knowingly in all my life wronged either man or woman."

MARCH 13.—Mr. White advised me to go to Howe & Hummel and get a settlement up to date, which I did, Kaffenburgh giving me a check for about $500. Mr. White then made a new agreement with me, by which I was to go to any expense in getting the proof of the identity of the man who was behind the Greater New York Detective Agency.

MARCH 14.—Mr. White was thoroughly alarmed over the Thaw persecution. He began to see a seriousness which he had not previously perceived. "I want a good man to go with me," he said to me, "I have a premonition that a desperate man will be taken while I am on the other side."

MARCH 23.—Mr. White is thoroughly alarmed over the Thaw persecution. He began to see a seriousness which he had not previously perceived. "I want a good man to go with me," he said to me, "I have a premonition that a desperate man will be taken while I am on the other side."

MARCH 24.—Mr. White is thoroughly alarmed over the Thaw persecution. He began to see a seriousness which he had not previously perceived. "I want a good man to go with me," he said to me, "I have a premonition that a desperate man will be taken while I am on the other side."

BERGOFF, HIS EMPLOYER WHITE, AND THAW

"Wait for me and I will be up in a jiffy," he said, and he came in his hands within ten minutes.

"Together we entered the cafe of the hotel, where Mr. White ordered two whiskeys, and following a frequent habit of his, made a quick dive for the lunch counter to get a bit of cheese. When we were seated at a table I told him that I had positive information that Harry K. Thaw, of Pittsburgh, was the man who was having him watched. He trembled violently, shaking from his head to his feet, and as overcomes was that he spilled the whiskey in raising the glass to his lips.

"Suspected It All Along." "I suspected it all along," he grained, "but what I wanted was the proof."

I then repeated my counsel of months before.

"You must have those shadows arrested," I begged.

"Well, you may be right. I will wait a day or so and think it over," he said.

That night he sent around letters for the Lew Fields Theatre, where "If Happened in Nordanland" was playing. This was a hint to me that he feared possible violence at the hands of his arch-enemy Thaw. Mr. White was not, however, to see them, but he did not know that.

Nervous in Stateroom. I went to Mr. White in his state room, and found him to be extremely nervous and alarmed. He told me that he was sure that Mr. White would have done something to cause the arrest of the McKenna outfit, and that he was sure that he would have done something to cause the arrest of the McKenna outfit.

White's Alleged Order. The order given by Thaw to the Greater New York Detective Agency on hearing that Mr. White was going abroad, as reported to me, was: "Follow this man, annoy him as much as possible and give him a jiving send."

to say that he was never tempted, only annoyed.

JUNE 11, 1905.—I called at Mr. White's office, being in that neighborhood. He had only a few days returned from a trip into Canada. He looked fit and was in excellent humor.

"They are after me again," he said in a merry tone. "What I have to say is that I am not doing anything to be ashamed of."

"Have them looked up," again I insisted
